Father Liam says: Many years ago when I was a humble curate a new Parish Priest was appointed and one of his first initiatives was to encourage the parishioners to invest in a Sunday Missal. He did not approve of all these A4 sheets that contain the readings and prayers of the Mass – he felt that a Missal was much more dignified and gave the people an opportunity to acquaint themselves with the Scripture readings in advance. A large number of these Missals found their way into the Repository and many people acquired them – at a time in the Church's year – such as we have just now. The problem was that we had a succession of big feasts that the Sunday Missal did not cater for – The Ascension, Corpus Christi, St Peter and Paul among them. So the launch of that great initiative was less than spectacular!

Last Sunday we had the Feast of Pentecost marking the end of the great Season of Easter. Today we celebrate the Feast of the Holy Trinity followed by Corpus Christi and the Feast of Sts Peter and Paul on the following Sundays. So it will not be until 7th July that we resume having green as the liturgical colour of our Sunday Masses. We last used green on Sunday way back on 3rd March – just before the Season of Lent began - so we have changed colours a number of times since then, from purple to violet to white. We had red last week for Pentecost as we will again in two weeks to honour Sts Peter and Paul.

We have been honouring some other events as well at this time. Last Sunday we celebrated the day on which many of our young people received their First Holy Communion. This was indeed a very special day for them, for their families and for our Parish. We offer our most sincere thanks to their Catechists who have put so much effort and love into making it so special. Today the children receive their First Holy Communion Certificates.

We have recently been remembering the 75th Anniversary of the D-Day landings, which were decisive in the closing stages of World War II. On a happier note, there have been celebrations – certainly in Connemara – marking the centenary of the first crossing of the Atlantic by plane. Alcock and Brown were those magnificent aviators who were the first to fly the Atlantic non-stop. Jack Alcock and Arthur Brown (known to his family as Ted) set off from a gusty St John's in Newfoundland on a Saturday morning 14th June 1919. They made the crossing in 16 hours and 28 minutes in a fragile, two-seater open cock-pit airplane – then the longest flight ever made and landed in a bog near Clifden in Co. Galway at 8.40 am on Sunday 15th June. The local people were all at church when they landed. Those were the days! Most were at Mass and some were at the Church of Ireland Service. The first witness was a little boy, Harry Sullivan, who was kept at home for fear of contracting the fearful Spanish Flu that was raging. There were more casualties of the Spanish Flu than those lost in World War I.

Brown's first words were 'Yesterday we were in America'. Word soon got around and the Vimy plane, damaged as it came down, became a celebrity in itself – while the aviators were hailed as heroes of a new wonderful age of flight. Alcock was from Manchester and was 27 at the time, always into mechanical engineering. He was the eldest of five and was shy and hated publicity. Brown's family were Americans who had settled in Scotland. He was an only child, aged 33 and more sociable. Both were veterans of the First World War. Brown had been through the Somme and suffered from a shattered leg. They met at a Vickers training station and both were interested in flight. Lord Northcliffe, the Press baron, was offering prize money of £100,000 (about half a million pounds today) for the Atlantic crossing.

It was a dangerous mission. Fatalities involved in early flight – pioneered by the Wright brothers in 1899 – were high. They used marine instruments of compass and sextant to guide them. They carried a colossal tank of 865 gallons of fuel and two bags of mail, making it the first ever air mail postal service. There were terrifying moments, as when the engine stalled and they dropped 500 feet. Their radio conked out and an exhaust pipe broke. The noise from the engine made conversation impossible and they had to communicate in notes. Some are still preserved. (One says: 'Have a sandwich') Sadly Alcock was killed later that year flying from London to Paris in bad conditions. Brown passionately believed that aviation would be a bridge to world peace but he was greatly disillusioned as he witnessed aerial bombing develop during World War II. His son was killed in aerial combat. Brown died at 62 from an apparent accidental pain-killer overdose – still suffering from his leg injuries. Today Clifden, the Capital of Connemara, will be the centre of great celebrations. It would be nice to think that the churches will be full as well!
