FATHER LIAM SAYS: For whatever reason there were more poets among those who fought in the First World War. than in the Second World War. It wasn't just English poetry that flourished in the midst of this horrific war but also French, Italian, German and Russian poetry. It is amazing that soldiers, writing in their dug-outs or shell-holes, bogged down in muddy trenches could produce all this. It wasn't just poetry that was being written in these awful conditions. The minds of all the men were never far from their loved ones at home and they would be anxious to get letters to them and from them.

The question of responsibility for the outbreak of war in 1914 is still not settled, in spite of all the studies devoted to it. It is accepted that the two systems of alliances that had already been built up made an outbreak all too likely. When the Archduke Franz Ferdinand came to inspect the Bosnian Army at Sarajevo in the tense world of July 1914, his assassination triggered the inferno. At such a time there was generally an acceptance that the war was justified and there was little criticism of the policy – except that it was not sufficiently prepared for. Governments seemed to have an appetite for war and the peace efforts of Pope Benedict XV were mocked and ridiculed.

Among those involved in the war and whose poems have come down to us was an army chaplain, Father Albert Purdie. His poetry may not rank by us with that of the famous poets' but he deserves to be remembered as he spent the last 28 years of his life in Goring. He died in 1976 at the age of 88. Due to poor health he had retired to Goring in 1948 at the age of 60. Canon Desmond McCarthy was parish priest here from 1952 to 1978 so he was here for almost the entire time that Father Purdie lived in Goring.

Albert Purdie was born in 1888 and attended St Edmund's College, Ware. He was ordained in 1914 as a priest for the diocese of Westminster. When war broke out he volunteered as a military chaplain. His connection to St Edmund's College remained strong and the war-time editions of the college magazines contain some reports from the Front and his life in the trenches, which are contained in the book. Chris Warren, whose uncle was a great friend of Father Purdie has edited a book of his poems. I have ordered some copies for the Repository (priced at £6.00.) It is possible that one or more of you might know something of Father Purdie or might even have known him. The editor of the little book, Chris Warren, who lives in Chesterfield, would be delighted to learn more about him, as would I! The uncle of Chris was killed a week before the end of the war and Chris never got to meet Father Purdie though, ironically, he too came to live in Worthing for a time.

Father Purdie went on from France to serve in Salonika and Constantinople and ended the war with an OBE for bravery. He published a collection of war-time poems, which Chris tracked down to the Imperial War Museum. After the war Father Purdie gained a degree from Cambridge and returned to St. Edmund's College as a teacher. It was the Diocesan College of Westminster Diocese and he became headmaster in 1929 until 1936. During the Second World War he served as a chaplain at an RAF camp in Bedfordshire. We are very grateful to Chris Warren for rescuing these poems from oblivion. This is one of the poems:

The Highest Love

And there is no more word to say
Only to part
Each on his separate way.
And since you loved for but a day,
You will forget:
For me, in my heart's a mansion
Scatters into dust
Another idol, and again I tread
The silent ruins of a love
For ever dead.

O God, forbid that it should come to me,
That losing all
I at the last lose thee.
This heart of mine is sanctuary
For outlaw loves:
But, come thou now, King Lover'
Hold me very close,
While the last fugitive is fled,
And show at length thy child where Love
Is never dead.
